JADE rating: 5/10

This is the first book by Guild photographer Steve DT. Readers may well recall seeing Steve's photography in previous issues of JADE. This book however is not, as one would expect, a collection of erotic images as such, but rather one of desires and dreams, longings, lusts and fantasies. The book was inspired by the hopes and dreams of female adult advertisers who want to seek out fresh new experiences and shed their inhibitions. Everyone is familiar with the classified personal style adverts (indeed JADE ran some itself early in its evolution), often tucked away at the back of newspapers and magazines, but which promise so much for the casual reader and the seeker alike. The adverts featured here are genuine and taken from across Europe (however, a quick word of warning before you get excited: you cannot make contact with any of these advertisers) and are used as examples to show that desire is universal across boundaries, states and languages. Each facing page has a colour photo of a scantily clad lady as an appetiser, with several smaller black and white images mixed in among the adverts. This will not be to everyone's taste, but no doubt there will be some who find the subject matter appealing.

Again, not an erotic book one can hardly pass up to review a title featuring the world's most glamorous woman to be said that at her Taylor far outshone her contemporaries and was many to be the epitome of perfection, with her curly dark tresses and stunning smile who am I to disagree. This format book brings together a collection of photos from across her life, some of them taken candidly showing her at her most vulnerable; they also show the sensuality of the woman's desirability. There are many unseen and unpublished photos in this large collection and one of
